The Tableaux at the Academy Near Point Caswell POINT CASWELL, March 10th

We were there, Messrs, Editors glong with a great many others to witness the trial performance of the parties who had volunteered their services to give an entert inment for the promotion of the temperance cause in this vicinity. We knew that not solitary member of the recent organization had ever engaged in a thing of the kind before and we could not divine how they could anticipate success. At 8 o'clock, however, the source was opened in a charade in three scenes; dramatic, in which six characters ap peared, who soon removed apprehen sions of failure, and with the drop of the curtain received the most unmis takable evidence from an appreciative andience of having filled the bill most brilliantly and triumphantly. Next, best performers in our section afforded quite a treat, (and which was repeated after which a tableau scene, "Joan of Arc," was finely represented. Next, a must say here, though policy might dictate a different course, that H. M. celled in that character by any one. The wnole hou-e was almost convulsed with laughter. "The Happy Family" feature in the sc ne was the singing of "Silver Threads among the Gold," by years old. Next, the Charade in six characters: "'Tis an ill wind that blows nobody any good," held the andience in the highest admiration and interest, and the frequent bursts of passover immolated the figurative waiter," was doing fully his part of the work. This could not have been beaten; all did wed, and it would be but an invidious distinction to signalize any one without the rest. But I three more of the many charades and tableaux which were given on the ocsented by all the characters; Susan passed, The Seasons were finely represented, while The Old Bachelor at Home was life like and unmistakable: Leap Year was well performed; The Blind Beggar was as natural as life; The Wrangling Pair-husband and wife was rendered with much spirit; Wine as a Medicine never was excelled in this or any other country; the statuary Faith, Hope and Charity was fine, and reflected much credit on the ladies who prepared and arrayed them to such a state of perfection. The exhibition then closed with the negro minstrels, and we feel assured that no where in the broad face of nature could you find more inimitable and ludicrous characters than appeared in this part of the performance James to consult about the question. Thomson and H. M. Foard were the master spirits in this, and made many resist the inclination to laugh-with
